

This is another motion by the media industries of America in the name of good intention. This will be abused by them, as has virtually every similar law/regulation of its class that has come before. What is the FCC's mind set, that you will leave it to litigation to straighten out your poorly designed documents? The pressure from corporate media is stronger then the opposition because they can afford it. The rest of us free citizens must spend our time working. You think the average American realizes what the implications of such ruling is?

Please do not hinder another developing format before the public can realize its true potential. Fair use is the foundation of our country, and further limiting it will leave future generations with an intellectual wasteland controlled by corporations. This was never the intent of our forefathers with copyright. Please FCC don't hammer another nail into the coffin of Fair Use.
